Letter of recommendation

July 19th 2009

I was extraordinarily delighted to hear about the recent plans to translate Regina Obermayr-Breitfuss's book

Intuition - Theorie und praktische Anwendungen

(Intuition – Theory and Practical Applications)

into two major world languages.

This publication has become standard literature in many fields of study and endeavour, dealing with the critically important subject of INTUITION. It summarizes in an ingenious manner her insights and experience based on many years of international research.

To my knowledge, this publication is a comprehensive and quintessential compilation of all currently available knowledge on the subject, not merely that which is available in the German-speaking world. The work ranks tops on the international scale, which is why these translations are not only desirable but necessary if this work is to be integrated into the international research in this field. This publication also represents a pioneer accomplishment in the sense that it works simultaneously with two branches of research: both a qualitative and quantitative interpretive path are developed, presenting, for example, an empirical study on the development of the ability to access intuition.

I am equally impressed by the empirically verifiable results, based on statistical evaluations, of the experiments exploring the human capacity to perceive at a distance (see : “Intercultural qualitative research based on scientific interviews in the USA, Hawaii, Western Samoa and Austria”).

We can expect these insights to serve as an increasingly important basis for many further works, not only for diploma projects and master’s theses, but for doctoral dissertations and research projects at universities and in applied research.

Intuition is not only an essential basis for work in various areas of studies, but, increasingly, a tool for man’s everyday life. The concept by STEPS, for example, is preparing a special component of “success through mental fitness” which is substantially based on insights presented by the author. That Dr. Obermayr-Breitfuss was invited to take on the scientific direction of a comprehensive project for the scientific channel of Bavarian TV (BR-Alpha), a project recently and successfully completed, shows at the very least the pertinence to everyday life and the relevance of her research.

I very much hope indeed that the efforts for a world-wide propagation of these insights on the subject of intuition -- more essential today than ever before -- can be realized thanks to the proposed translations.
